BENCH TEST PREP COURSE FOR INTERNATIONAL DENTISTS

Friday, July 31 – Sunday, August 2, 2015
New York University College of Dentistry

COURSE DIRECTOR:

Dr. James KAIM is a Professor in the NYU College of Dentistry Department of Cariology and Comprehensive Care. He has nearly 40 years of experience in training foreign-trained dentists, including past bench tests in Florida and New York State, challenge examinations for different dental schools, and licensing preparation programs for WREB and Florida. He was also Director of the Simulation Program for Foreign-Trained Dentists for applicants accepted for enrollment at NYUCD. He will be assisted by other experienced NYUCD faculty, some of whom are foreign-trained dentists that currently teach at the College.

This “hands-on” program, to be held in the New York University College of Dentistry (NYUCD) Simulation Lab, is designed for the foreign-trained dentist applying for admission to any U.S. or Canadian Advanced Standing DDS Program. It is not a pre-requisite for admission, nor does it guarantee acceptance to any dental program. This course is intended to evaluate and elevate a participant’s skills to prepare for any bench exam that may be required in their admissions process. The course will consist of supervised instruction by NYUCD faculty, delivered in English only. All necessary typodonts and instruments will be provided. The program allows each student additional free time to practice any other procedures as needed for any specific program. Students will be able to keep their typodont for continued practice at home. Students will also be permitted to forward additional work after class to program faculty for consultation and evaluation.
