The Kenya Oral Health and Education Study is a comprehensive training program for girls in Africa, focusing on oral health and training young women to become health leaders in their communities. The aim of the program is to offer a template for healthy behavior to be replicated in other areas of Africa.

Yvonne Buischi is a Clinical Associate Professor in the Ashman Department of Periodontology and Implant Dentistry at NYU College of Dentistry, with an extensive background in global health in underserved areas in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Peter Loomer is the Dean of the School of Dentistry, UT Health in San Antonio, Texas. He is the founding Director of the NYU Center for Global Oral Health, and has devoted many years to improving oral health and the healthcare workforce in developing nations in Africa, Latin America and the Middle East.
